

Hyphenation is the business of breaking a word between two lines when the remainder would otherwise be unreasonably conspicuous, and typographers have argued about it interminably. Consider representative examples: communication, extraordinary, misunderstanding, particularly, responsibility, understanding, international, development, organisation.